Clare is a flight attendant on a Cielo Airlines flight from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Madrid, Spain. Right after takeoff, everything is going smoothly: passengers are reading, sleeping, and enjoying their in-flight movies, shows, and music. However, about 20 minutes after departing, a man in his 20s sitting in an aisle seat appears to be a little ^{1.} _____. He has lowered his mask below his nose, and his ^{2.} _____ seems annoyed: he is slouching, his arms are crossed, and, when Clare goes to talk to him, she can tell by the tone of his voice that he is not having a good time on this flight. Luckily, since Clare is trained in de-escalation, she is ^{3.} _____ she will be able to handle this situation like a true airline professional.

“Excuse me, sir,” She says to him, politely. “What is your name?”

“John,” he says, tapping his foot on the floor. Right away, Clare sees by his actions that he might be anxious: he keeps looking at other passengers, has his seatbelt tightly buckled, and has also been biting his nails. Calmly, Clare reminds John of the COVID-19 ^{4.} _____ for the flight, including the fact that masks must be worn at all times while in the air, on the ground, and in the airport terminals.

“Yeah, yeah,” John says. “But then how am I supposed to sleep? It feels like I can’t breathe when I wear this thing!”

Right here, Clare is able to identify the root ^{5.} _____ of John’s situation: he is nervous about flying, and his ^{6.} _____ tapping of his feet along with his fingers on the tray table show that he might be irritated, but he is not ^{7.} _____. Clare chooses to ^{8.} _____ to John’s problems: he’s been afraid of flying since he was a kid, and he is traveling alone for the first time on an international flight as part of his University’s study abroad program. If she only scolds him for not wearing his mask properly, Clare might appear

^{9.} _____ - however, instead, she decides to ^{10.} _____ by talking about the ways she calms herself down when dealing with stressful situations. As they talk - and as John slides his mask up just a few inches higher! - John becomes less animated. He relaxes his shoulders, stops tapping his hands, and leans back into his seat, since he is allowed to do so following takeoff. As a matter of fact, after seeming annoyed and short in his ^{11.} _____ when the two started chatting, John becomes more ^{12.} _____ after only a couple minutes.

“I know the mask is a small thing,” Clare says, with a pleasant smile. “But the small things are sometimes the most important.” ^{13.} _____ the conversation, Clare is expressive and offers John a little bit of ^{14.} _____: she gives him an extra bottle of water and ^{15.} _____ free access to WiFi for the second part of the flight!
